Judith Leyster, born in Haarlem in 1609, is one of the most celebrated painters of the Dutch Golden Age. She achieved remarkable success during her lifetime, leaving behind a legacy of exquisite portraits and genre scenes that continue to captivate art enthusiasts to this day. Leyster was not only a talented artist but also one of the few female painters of her time. Despite the gender biases prevalent in the art world during the 17th century, Leyster managed to carve her niche and become a prominent figure in the Dutch art scene.

Early Life and Career

Born into a prosperous family, Leyster showed a keen interest in art from an early age. She received formal art training, most likely under Frans Pietersz de Grebber, before establishing her own studio in Haarlem. Leyster's talent and passion soon gained recognition, and she became the first woman to be admitted to the Haarlem Guild of St. Luke, an artists' guild typically reserved for men.
