The Birth of a Legend

The story of Ace Cafe London began in 1938 when its doors first opened as a humble roadside cafe on the North Circular Road in Stonebridge. The Ace Cafe was not only a place to refuel physically but also a hub for ideas, stories, and dreams. It quickly became the epicenter for the emerging youth culture, where riders shared their passion for motorcycles, rock 'n' roll, and rebellion. The cafe's unique blend of adrenaline, freedom, and the unmistakable roar of engines became its trademark.

A Cultural Phenomenon

In the decades that followed, the Ace Cafe London evolved into more than just a cafe. It became a symbol of the counterculture, a cultural phenomenon that resonated far beyond the boundaries of the UK. Rockers, bikers, and petrolheads from all walks of life gravitated towards this pilgrimage site, forging a sense of community united by a love for the open road and shared experiences.

The Ace Cafe London played a pivotal role in the growth of the cafe racer subculture. With its strategic location on the A406, it became a hub for motorcycle racing, inspiring riders to modify their bikes for increased speed and agility. The cafe's Tonic Bar, serving a unique blend of coffee and stout, added to the charming and rebellious atmosphere that attracted both riders and spectators.

Revival and the 75th Anniversary Celebration

Although the original Ace Cafe London closed its doors in 1969 due to the decline in popularity of the motorcycle scene, its legacy never faded away. In 1997, Mark Wilsmore, a passionate biker, resurrected the Ace Cafe brand with a new location only a stone's throw away from the original venue.

The revival of the Ace Cafe London sparked a renewed interest in the cafe racer culture, creating a home for generations of motorcycle enthusiasts to congregate, swap stories, and celebrate the rich history of Ace Cafe. In 2013, as the iconic venue approached its 75th anniversary, a special celebration was organized to
