Examples of Blizzard Poems by Henri Cole

Here is a glimpse into the mesmerizing world of Henri Cole's Blizzard Poems:

“Snowfields burnished with light—
I dreamed I was on fire with longing.”
- From "Fire with Longing"”

In just two lines, Cole captures the intensity of longing amidst wintry scenes. The imagery of a snowfield burning with light juxtaposes warmth and cold, symbolizing the conflicting emotions one can experience within.

“Blizzard all night, silence and respect for my work—
God present and speaking in me like Frère Jacques.””

In this poem, Cole portrays the quietude and tranquility brought about by a blizzard. The silence becomes a stage for introspection and creative contemplation, connecting the religious and the artistic in a delicate dance of words.

Henri Cole, one of our greatest poets, explores the discordant nature of our condition on earth in Blizzard, his tenth collection.

“An artist of the greatest gifts.” —Louise Glück

Daring, tender, truthful, the poems in Blizzard, Henri Cole’s tenth book, build on a reputation for quiet mastery. Whether he is wrestling with the mundane, history and its disasters, or sexual love, he can sound both classical and contemporary, with the modern austerity of Cavafy and Bishop. Often exploring the darker places of the heart, his sonnets do not lie down obediently, but spark with an honest self-awareness.

Cole’s lucid, empathetic poems—with lyrical beauty and ethical depth—seem to transmute the anxious perplexities of our time.
