

Dealer Choice, Closer, Howard Katz: Don Juan In Soho The Red Lion

When it comes to theatre, the name Howard Katz is synonymous with excellence. An accomplished actor, director, and playwright, Katz has left his mark on some of the most iconic plays of our time. With his versatile acting range, Katz has stolen the audience's hearts in productions like Dealer's Choice, Closer, and Don Juan In Soho, to name just a few. One cannot help but be captivated by his mesmerizing performances that leave a lasting impact.

One of Katz's most noteworthy roles is his portrayal of Stephen in Dealer's Choice, a play by Patrick Marber. The intense drama revolves around a group of men who gather weekly for their regular poker game. Katz's portrayal of Stephen, a waiter with a gambling addiction, is riveting to watch. His performance delves deep into the complexities of addiction, showcasing both vulnerability and resilience.

In Closer, another masterpiece by Patrick Marber, Katz showcases his versatility yet again. The play explores the intricacies of relationships and the blurred boundaries between love and desire. Katz's portrayal of Dan, a struggling writer, is both charming and heartbreaking. His ability to convey a rollercoaster of emotions in a single scene is awe-inspiring.

Dealer's Choice

'I feel it's my duty to proclaim it from the rooftops: this is it, this is the play that will remind you, at the end of a year that has contained too few stand-out new-writing hits and far too many musicals, why we go to the theatre - and just how good it can get.' Telegraph

Closer

'Patrick Marber's searing follow-up to Dealer's Choice establishes him as the leading playwright of his generation.' Independent on Sunday

'One of the best plays of sexual politics in the language: it is right up there with Williams's Streetcar, Mamet's Oleanna, Albee's Virginia Woolf, Pinter's Old Times and Hare's Skylight.' Sunday Times

Howard Katz

'After Dealer's Choice (1995), his gripping study of self-destructive gamblers, and Closer (1997), a thrilling account of love, sex and betrayal, this third instalment of his trilogy set in contemporary London tackles the biggest themes of all - life, death, God and the human soul. It's great to see a contemporary dramatist wrestling with such material.' Telegraph

Don Juan in Soho

'One of the foremost dramatic chroniclers of modern British life. Line by line, this is the best written of all Marber's plays. You want to hang around its phrases (how often does that happen in the theatre?): hardly a minute passes without a satirical swipe, a gutsy joke.' Observer

The Red Lion

'Marber, in this riveting new piece, uses the world of non-league, semi-pro football to explore issues of trust and loyalty and the larger division between individual ambition and the collective ethic. If big issues emerge naturally from the action, it is because Marber is writing about a world he knows intimately. Everything feels right.' Guardian
