The Origins of Redwork Embroidery

Redwork embroidery is a technique that gained popularity in the late 19th century. It involves using red thread to create elegant designs on a white or off-white fabric. This style of embroidery captured the hearts of countless artisans due to its simplicity, versatility, and ability to add a touch of charm to any project.

Originally known as "Turkey red" embroidery due to the vibrant red color used, redwork embroidery was commonly used to adorn household items such as quilts, tea towels, aprons, and children's clothing. It quickly became a beloved craft among homemakers, who delighted in creating beautiful, yet practical, items for their homes.
