One of the first things young children learn is that a day begins with the sun rising and ends with the setting. Then the moon appears and it gets dark. It's long time to go to sleep. But luckily the moon ensures that the weather does not get too dark, and then suddenly the sun rises again and a new day begins.

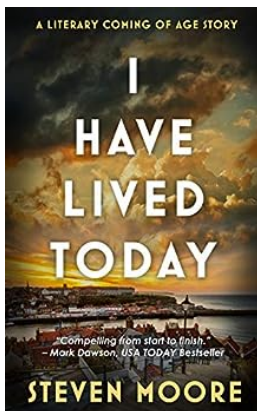

Moon-Sun is a wonderful book to read with your children. The illustrations are colorful and soft and let the imaginations of the children run wild. With the rising sun there is a lot to see. Maybe too much that's why the night's sleep is so important. But before going to sleep it is good to have the children recount what they have experienced that day.

The book gives you a lot of opportunity to tell about all kinds of day-to-day adventures and thus teach the children how we can fill our day and our evening. And those are beautiful subjects for the children to draw or to tell about them. It can go on endlessly because there is always a new day until the moon takes over.
