Vancouver, the largest city in British Columbia and the third largest city in Canada, is a sea port in British Columbia's southwest corner sitting at the foot of the Coast Mountain range. Much of Vancouver is built on a peninsula surrounded by water. Vancouver is Canada's third largest city. Vancouver, a city with a view, has a natural harbor, a backdrop of rugged mountain peaks, a forest-like park, and sandy beaches. You can ride a gondola car up Grouse Mountain in North Vancouver, and you can drive almost to the peak of Mount Seymour for beautiful views and skiing sites. In 1808, Simon Fraser explored the Fraser River. In the 1820s, salmon were salted in barrels at Fort Langley. The Hudson's Bay Company founded Fort Langley in 1827. A salmon fishery was established by the Hudson's Bay Company on San Juan Island in 1851. Gold was discovered on the Fraser River in 1858. In the 1860s, the first commercial cannery in B.C. began operation. Gold was discovered in Barkerville in 1862. B.C. became Canada's sixth province in 1871. The first foreign shipment of grain from Moodyville was in 1864. The first fish hatchery at Bon Accord Creek at Port Mann was begun in 1882. The Town of Granville was incorporated as the City of Vancouver on April 6, 1886. Vancouver was destroyed by fire on June 13, 1886. In the late 1800s, Lynn Valley's centuries old Douglas fir and western red cedar were milled into lumber for export to Eastern Canada, the United States and Europe. Many of these trees were over ninety meters high and eleven meters in circumference. In the park, you can see some of the stumps from these huge trees. Moderate temperatures and an average annual rainfall exceeding 150 centimeters provide excellent growing conditions. The lush second growth forest is good evidence of the productivity of the area. The large trees which now cover the part are on average only seventy to ninety years old. The forest is mostly Douglas fir, western hemlock, and western red cedar. Along the creek where flooding occurs, sitka spruce, cottonwood, alder and dense shrub undergrowth are found. Lynn Canyon Park officially opened as a municipal park in 1912. The McTavish brothers, whose company originally logged the area, donated five hectares of land fronting on Lynn Creek. The District of North Vancouver added another four hectares. The suspension bridge was also opened in 1912; it hangs twenty storeys (about fifty meters) above Lynn Creek. In 1991, the District of North Vancouver added 241 hectares to the park. The Park has many hiking trails. The Port Moody Station Museum is owned and operated by the Port Moody Heritage Society and is part of their effort to promote increased awareness and knowledge of Port Moody's heritage and history. Harbour Centre Tower, 555 West Hastings Street – Glass Sky Lift elevators whisk you 180 metres (553 feet) up to a spectacular 360-degree observation deck where you can pick out Vancouver's famous landmarks, aided by telescopes and information plaques. The Capilano Salmon Hatchery was designed to increase the declining salmon run in the Capilano River. This hatchery features models and diagrams illustrating the life span and characteristics of the salmon. Fish in various stages of growth are visible through glass front holding tanks. In spawning season, you can watch them struggling up river and leaping fish ladders into the hatchery. At the B.C. Sugar Museum, we learned that there are two sources of sugar, sugar cane and sugar beet. There is no difference in the finished product between the two kinds except you cannot make a brown sugar from sugar beets. All the raw sugar cane for Vancouver is brought in bulk cargo ships from cane mills in Queensland, Australia. It takes seven tons of cane to manufacture one ton of sugar. The sugar is in the juice. The last section in the book talks about the Vancouver architectural styles of houses.
