She has experimented with watercolors, acrylics, graphite, and even mixed media, seeking to find the perfect medium to evoke the delicate textures and vibrant colors of insects.

One of her signature techniques involves a meticulous layering of colors, building up the details gradually to achieve a level of depth and realism that is almost uncanny. Through this technique, Luiselli manages to capture every minute feature of her subjects, from the tiniest bristles on a caterpillar to the reflecting scales on a beetle's exoskeleton.

Only when she is satisfied with the sketch does she begin the demanding process of adding color and bringing her creation to life.

As she works, Luiselli often finds herself completely absorbed in her art, losing track of time as she meticulously adds layer upon layer of color and detail.
