One of the key aspects that sets Indian dyes and paints apart is the meticulous preparation process. Before the colors are brought to life on canvas, the raw materials go through a series of treatments that involve grinding, boiling, fermenting, and even aging. These processes not only enhance the richness of the colors but also make them highly durable and resistant to fading.

One of the most famous natural dyes used in India is indigo, derived from the plant Indigofera tinctoria. This deep blue pigment has been highly valued for centuries and was even considered a luxury item during the British Raj. Barbara Eikmeier's skillful utilization of this precious pigment in her artworks offers a glimpse into the royal past of Indian dyes and paints.

Another vital aspect of Indian dyes and paints lies in their association with various cultural and religious traditions. Different regions of India have their signature colors and motifs, each reflecting the unique heritage and influences of their respective communities. Barbara Eikmeier beautifully weaves these diverse elements into her artworks, creating pieces that are not only visually stunning but also carry deep cultural significance.
