It was in school that he first discovered his preference for unconventional behavior. Wiles would intentionally dress in bizarre attire, perform outrageous pranks that attracted scorn and laughter, and even engage in public acts of self-deprecation. Rather than seeking acceptance, he reveled in the feelings of humiliation that emanated from these experiences.

A Journey into the World of Extreme Humiliation

As he grew older, Wiles began to explore life beyond the boundaries of his small town. He ventured into the realms of extreme sports, pushing himself to the limits both physically and mentally. Throughout his exploits, he realized that the thrill of physical danger and public humiliation were inextricably intertwined.

One notable incident involved Wiles attempting a daring motorcycle stunt in front of a large crowd. The stunt itself was impressive, but what left the audience aghast was his choice to perform it in nothing but his underwear, eliciting a mixture of shock, awe, and laughter.
