Black Like Me

Author: John Howard Griffin | Year Published: 1961 | Original Language: English

Crossing the Color Line in the Deep South

Griffin, a white writer from Texas, declares his plan to enter the world of a black man. He then travels to the Deep South in November 1959 and lives among African Americans for six weeks. The purpose of his book is to show the treatment of African Americans by white Southerners.

Identify
After declaring his plan, Griffin asks a waiter when he looks in a mirror.

Segregation
Griffin experiences the psychological toll of racism and segregation firsthand.

Recognition
Griffin and his family suffer backlash when he publishes his experience.

Author
JOHN HOWARD GRIFFIN
1915-1961
Griffin took an acting job after blindness resulting from a war injury forced him to abandon his plans to become a doctor. He wrote several novels, about African, and two novels about Israel. After miraculously recovering his sight, he undertook the project that would become Black Like Me.

Context
Catholicism
Griffin views the racism he experiences through the Catholic faith and processes white Christian records of hypocrisy.
Civil Rights Movement
Griffin's experience took place at the height of the civil rights movement, which challenged racial segregation and violence.
Racial Backlash
Racial groups and individuals used violence and intimidation to try to keep African Americans down, something Griffin experienced firsthand.

Themes
Skin Color
Simply changing skin color results in being treated differently.
Blindness & Invisibility
Blacks feel invisible in a world where whites are blind to racism.
Hospitality
Hospitality toward one another is a rare black case with racism.

No one, not even a saint, can live without a sense of personal value.
John Howard Griffin, Black Like Me
