Recognizing True Friends

In life, it is not always easy to differentiate between genuine friends and those who only pretend to be. The quote's emphasis on rejoicing at your safe return serves as a litmus test for understanding who truly has your best interests at heart.

True friends will genuinely celebrate your successes, big or small. They will be happy when you achieve your goals, overcome obstacles or return safely from a journey. These individuals will not only rejoice but also provide emotional support, guidance, and congratulate you on your accomplishments.

On the other hand, enemies, or those who pose a threat to our well-being, will often be indifferent or even resentful of our successes. They may try to undermine our achievements, diminish their significance, or construct obstacles along our path. It is important to be attentive and observe how the people around us react when we experience happiness or triumph. Their genuine response will help us identify our real friends.

The English dramatists Francis Beaumont and John Fletcher, collaborated in their writing during the reign of James I of England (James VI of Scotland, 1567–1625; in England he reigned from 1603).

Beaumont & Fletcher began to collaborate as writers soon after they met. After notable failures of their solo works their first joint effort, Philaster, was a success and tragicomedy was the genre they explored and built upon. There would be many further successes to follow.

There is an account that at the time the two men shared everything. They lived together in a house on the Bankside in Southwark, "they also lived together in Bankside, sharing clothes and having one wench in the house between them." Or as another account puts it "sharing everything in the closest intimacy."

Whatever the truth of this they were now recognised as perhaps the best writing team of their generation, so much so, that their joint names was applied to all the works in which either, or both, had a pen including those with Philip Massinger, James Shirley and Nathan Field.

The first Beaumont and Fletcher folio of 1647 contained 35 plays; 53 plays were included in the second folio in 1679. Other works bring the total plays in the canon to about 55. However there appears here to have been some duplicity on the account of the publishers who seemed to attribute so many to the team. It is now thought that the work between solely by Beaumont and Fletcher amounts to approximately 15 plays, though of course further works by them were re-worked by others and the originals lost.

After Beaumont's early death in 1616 Fletcher continued to write and, at his height was, by many standards, the equal of Shakespeare in popularity until his own death in 1625.
