Twelve-year-old Melinda Johnson, a music prodigy, dies in a cruel act of hatred and returns as a ghost.

Melinda Johnson lives with her mother in the Jim Crow South of the early 1950s. Her mother, recently widowed when her activist husband is killed, tries to shield Melinda from the ugliness and hatred that claimed her husband's life. She fills Melinda's life with love and music instead.

All that comes to a tragic end when Melinda's life is cut short by a cruel act of hatred. Melinda returns as a ghost and learns that her little white friend, Purvis, whom everyone calls peculiar, can see and communicate with earthbound spirits. Purvis, hiding dark secrets of his own, helps Melinda deal with her new state of existence and discover why she can't pass on. What is her unfinished business?

Is it to get revenge for her murder? Is it to take care of her distraught mother? Melinda begins to fear that she is not meant for Heaven.

Determined to help her mother deal with her untimely death, Melinda strikes a bargain with the local witch, Granny Hobbs, to resurrect her. Purvis intervenes but learns a devastating truth that threatens to send him down a path of death and damnation.

Melinda and Purvis try to help each other, but dark and malignant forces work against them. When the unspeakable evil reveals itself, will it destroy them both?
