The name "In Search Of Thursday" derives from a peculiar belief that Thursday possesses a certain mystical quality, where time seems to take on a different texture and tone compared to the other days. According to the group's philosophy, exploring the mysteries of time requires delving into the hidden wonders that Thursday holds.

Uncovering the Mysteries of Time

Every Thursday, members of In Search Of Thursday embark on thrilling expeditions to uncover the secrets of time. These expeditions can range from visiting ancient ruins and analyzing artifacts to conducting experiments in carefully controlled environments.

One of their most notable discoveries was the existence of "time pockets" - areas where time seems to slow down or speed up. These phenomena, previously relegated to the realms of fantasy and science fiction, were proven to be tangible by the diligent work of In Search Of Thursday. Through their meticulous research and dedication, they have managed to shed light on these temporal anomalies.

The group's investigations also extend to the exploration of time travel theories. While time travel remains an enigma in the scientific community, In Search Of Thursday believes that certain events throughout history suggest its plausibility. By analyzing historical accounts and incorporating advanced scientific models, they hope to uncover the truth behind the possibility of traversing through time.

The Quest for Knowledge

For In Search Of Thursday, their pursuit of understanding time goes beyond curiosity. They firmly believe that unlocking the mysteries of time can contribute to advancements in various fields, including physics, psychology, and philosophy.

The knowledge gained from their expeditions and studies is shared with the scientific community and the general public through academic papers, articles, and public lectures. Their aim is not only to satisfy their own intellectual curiosity but also to inspire others to explore the depths of time.

What do entrepreneurs and cockroaches have in common? How do you persuade WHSmith to sell pornography? Which is more important for a career in venture capital: commercial judgement or interrupting skills? Do lemons make better investments than plums? Discuss the value in investment analysis of ‘putting one’s cock on the block’.

In 1985, at the age of 25, long before Dragon’s Den was a thing, Paul Traynor had a fantasy about demolishing would-be entrepreneurs’ business propositions with a sharp question and a sceptically arched eyebrow. So he joined 3i, an investment firm which was known affectionately as the University of Venture Capital because it trained several generations of young men and women to become venture capital and private equity investors. A posting to Silicon Valley would have been nice. Instead he was sent to Birmingham, given a fast car, a telephone directory and told to go and find some companies to invest in. It all worked out very well ... in the end.

What readers say about In Search of Thursday:

“Compelling expose of venture capital, the world of speculative finance is made as accessible to us as shopping at Sainsburys. Wittily written with an appropriate cast-list of monsters and saints, the journey from office-boy to guv'nor contains enough pratfalls to keep you laughing and to downplay the modestly-described triumphs. Good fun.”

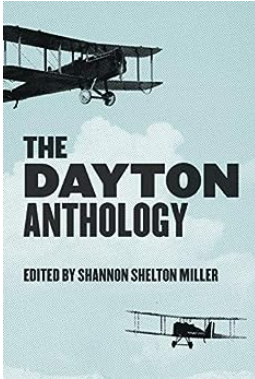

“Extremely well-written and amusing and despite having no background in finance, I had no difficulty in grasping the terminology. The narrative is completely charming and the anecdotes compelling – a great read!”

“Once I started it I couldn't put it down. It was characteristically funny and acerbic in equal measure.”

“Very lucid and amusing. There is such a wealth of stories and characters that I wonder if there is a script in it!”

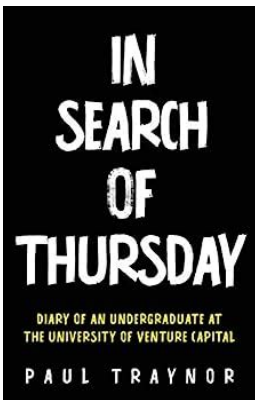

“Just brilliant, it zips along and there are moments you need to re-read bits as they are such a joy. The bit about projections and why you shouldn't fund a start up is sheer genius.”

“Outrageous and well written as ever, I particularly enjoyed the pen portraits. There were several situations which produced a suitable mixture of laughter and tears. A great memento of a very different era.”
