Four children travel back in time by playing the "What If?" game. Their adventures are only imaginary...or are they?

When David, Christy, Mary Beth and Slicker volunteer on an archeological dig, they find the work of sifting dirt through a screen tedious and boring. That is, until they are introduced to the "What If?" game. What if that piece of rock is really a broken arrowhead carved by a primitive man 10,000 years ago? What if that man had a daughter their age? What if that primitive girl left the arrowhead there for them to find?

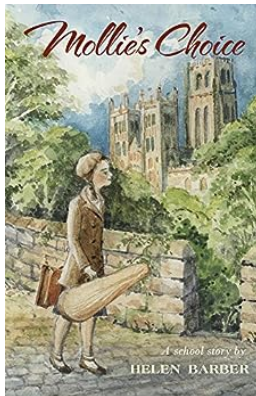

Join four friends as they travel around Kentucky having "What If?" adventures. You might be surprised to discover, as they did, that history is a lot more interesting when you meet the people who lived it.

Includes discussion questions and facts on the history of Kentucky.
