Her incredible journey began when she used her own finances to travel to Crimea, where she set up the British Hotel. This establishment served as a place for injured soldiers to rest, and Seacole's medical expertise and natural compassion ensured that they received the care they desperately needed.

Seacole's contributions went far beyond simply providing a safe haven. She was also known for her knowledge of herbal medicine and her ability to treat diseases such as cholera and dysentery. Her tireless efforts to heal both physical and emotional wounds earned her the respect and admiration of soldiers and medical professionals alike.

Edith Cavell: A Beacon of Light in Dark Times

Edith Cavell, born in England in 1865, was another extraordinary woman who defied expectations and showcased immense bravery during the First World War. Trained as a nurse, Cavell found herself in Brussels, caring for wounded soldiers from both sides of the conflict.

In addition to her nursing duties, Cavell became involved in a network helping allied soldiers escape to neutral countries. She risked her life every day, aiding over 200 soldiers in their escape, helping them find shelter, and ensuring their safe passage.

The occupation authorities eventually discovered Cavell's activities, and she was arrested, placed on trial, and sentenced to death. Despite international pleas for mercy, she upheld her principles and faced her fate with remarkable courage, uttering her famous words, "Patriotism is not enough. I must have no hatred or bitterness for anyone."
