The only difficulty is finding allies before the king or his sheriff kill him. Powerful earls are frightened. Tay heads off on his horse with two allies he doesn't want who stick to him like burrs – Archer, a runaway serf, and 12-year-old Lucy, fleeing an arranged marriage. What could possibly go wrong? Just about everything. This can't-put-it-down story for kids 9 to 12 and adults of all reading abilities gallops across a fabulous 13th century kingdom, set alight by one kid's determination to put wrong right and raise the banner of fair play over England. It's about courage and teamwork and wielding the Sword of the Spirit. It's also about the loyalty of animals and the children who love them. You won't put this story down and you won't forget Tay, from the first hour he's beaten and humiliated by the king. "In this debut middle-grade historical novel, a boy works to bring Magna Carta to reality in 13th-century England. . .Glass tells an exciting story of brave deeds and the transformation of a government, backed up by historical and cultural details that bring this long-ago world to life. The characters are well drawn, and it's especially nice to see a person of color in a time period too often imagined as solely white. . .An engaging, compelling tale whose relatable young hero's adventures link to a nation's destiny." --KIRKUS REVIEWS "The journey was wonderful, and combined strong characters with a fast-paced narrative."--Douglas A Pfeiffer, Book Publishing Exec, Fisher Company "It's a great read!" --Judith Sear, Teacher, Junior School, UK "I particularly enjoyed the depiction of Wallop's young friends and the development of their relationship. A great choice for young readers." --Mark Cohen, Ret. General Manager, CBS Television, San Francisco "A gripping adventure and full of hope."--Rod Lawrence, Friends International, Winchester, UK
