Derek Paterson was planning to leave Chile the day of the coup in 1973. A few days later he was incarcerated with thousands of others in the notorious National Stadium, scene of several documented killings and torture. After a nightmare lasting nearly two weeks he was finally freed - and expelled.

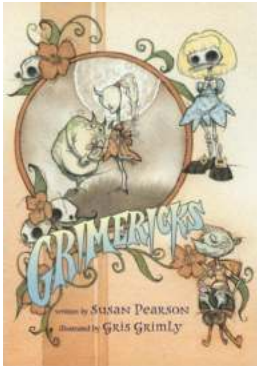

Nearly 36 years later he returned in much happier circumstances, as the husband of the New Zealand Ambassador to Chile. For three years he enjoyed Chilean hospitality and explored the fascinating country from north to south, reaffirming his love of the country and the people.

This is Derek's story.
