I failed my driving test- again. It was not part of the plan, but it has become a blessing in disguise. It forced me to notice a new world opening up to me during my bus journeys. I have become a proper convert now. I like to say that I am even helping the environment but that would be a lie because that is just a by-product of the experience. What is true though is that my father would be proud of me because I have kept a promise I made to him when I was little. “Yes daddy, I will never talk to strangers on the bus” I can see my small self-saying to him. This promise is being made possible because, I spend most of my time on the bus writing and being busy in my head. If you are curious about my “bus-scapades” then stay tuned.
