He studied firsthand the letters, artifacts, and images that depicted the struggles and experiences of soldiers and civilians during this turbulent time.

A Battle-Scarred Landscape

Stephen's exploration of the Civil War took him to the battlefields that witnessed the bloodiest clashes in American history. He walked the hallowed grounds of Gettysburg, reliving the intense fighting and feeling the weight of the sacrifices made by both Union and Confederate soldiers.

As he visited sites like Antietam, Shiloh, and Fredericksburg, Stephen marveled at the enduring marks left by the war. Cannonball scars on buildings, faded trenches, and silent graveyards all served as reminders of the tremendous losses suffered during the conflict.

Stephen discovered the courageous tales of women like Clara Barton and Harriet Tubman, who played essential roles in providing aid and support to soldiers. He read about soldiers' love letters and the heart-wrenching stories of families torn apart by the conflict.

Through his research, Stephen realized the incredible resilience and endurance displayed by those who lived through the war. Their stories evoked a profound sense of empathy within him and forever changed his perspective on the past.

Preserving History for Future Generations
