Years back, when I was working in a big international company, we would often get visitors from abroad asking what to see and do in Copenhagen. I used to sketch these small hand-drawn maps, which included tips and tricks of what they should do. Both the touristy things and those that would take them a bit off the beaten path – small Copenhagener secrets.

Copenhagen tops the charts on all kinds of metrics concerning quality of life and happiness. ECA International recently crowned the Danish capital as the world's top destination for European expats. And I hope you can see why. I am, of course, totally biased. But I just love Copenhagen. The city exudes captivating northern European-style architecture, cobbled alleyways, beautifully decorated shop windows, and flowing canals. Copenhagen feels exceptionally laid back, somewhat spacious, and charming.
