Nike hadn't wanted to believe that her father had hidden her away within the human realm when she wasn't even human. She was Fallen, Slayer, Seeker, and Vampire, and part of a race called Evecians – her father's people. Her father would have been next in line as Emperor, but with his death, Nike was exposed to those who sought to end her because of a prophecy.

Nike was a princess who tied the missing piece of the puzzle where prophecy had mentioned a Vampire King and a Hybrid Princess. And, Nike was expected to see its telling come to fruition. It included joining with others in Blood Bond to appease the persona manifestations inside her head as each gained power with each bond formed.

It was only a race against time as Nike agreed to help fulfill her destiny; it meant her becoming the enemy of the Ipuloks, an Alien version of Demons who had wanted to eliminate Nike to stop her from fulfilling prophecy. In the meantime, time was running out for her Vampire mate, weeks had passed, and he hadn't been able to sustain his body without her blood. He was slowly becoming a creature of Blood lust from which there was no return. Could Nike fulfill her promise against her desire to return and save her Vampire mate? Could she outrun the Ipuloks who hunted her? Could she make a choice that meant leaving her mate to become a creature of Blood lust? Nike had choices, but could she choose to save one even if it meant giving up on prophecy and dooming a Galactic nation towards annihilation?

Then Nike was faced with a decision – what would she do? Could she save her Vampire even if it meant giving up on prophecy and dooming a Galactic nation towards annihilation?
