"And I am reminded once again that I have never known anything at all."

From the moment Kelsey stumbled out of ROC, nothing has been as expected. The lies, betrayals and tortures she withstood have almost broken her. Kelsey doesn't know where to go from here. Charlie's compound lies in smoldering ashes, the League wants her dead, half the compound members would happily stick a knife in her back to avoid any further risk to themselves, and so many people have died already.

Except Rey. He's alive.

Kelsey's overwhelmed by his return from the dead, and the complicated secrets he hid from her. While she's overjoyed to have him back again, his presence further complicates everything. He's one more person she has to protect from the League. He's one more person who lied to her. And of course, he and Jax demand to know where they stand in Kelsey's heart. She doesn't have any answer for either of them. She loves them both. She needs them both. If she chooses one, the other will be devastated.

But choose she must. If no one else, Elijah will make sure of that as he devolves into a vile, heinous monster focused solely on inflicting as much pain as possible on Kelsey. As violent tensions grow between Kelsey and the League, factions of the compound members, and even Jax and Rey, she will find herself faced with a series of choices. Few are good. One is impossible. As Kelsey stumbles down a darker path of death, destruction and despair, one final choice may destroy her entirely.
