The World of "The Declaration"

Set in a future where an anti-aging drug called Longevity has been discovered, "The Declaration" presents a society where those who take the drug can live forever. However, the consequence of immortality is overpopulation, leading to strict laws against having children.

Our protagonist is Anna, a fifteen-year-old girl who is a surplus - an illegal child. Surpluses are considered a burden on society and are taken away from their parents at birth to live in Surplus Halls. Their purpose is to serve the Legals, people who have taken Longevity and who often treat surpluses as objects rather than human beings.

The first book in a YA trilogy set in a reproductively dystopian future. Reminiscent of Margaret Atwood and Aldous Huxley, but for teens.

It's the year 2140 and Anna shouldn't be alive. Nor should any of the children she lives with at Grange Hall. The facility is full of kids like her, kids whose parents chose to recklessly abuse Mother Nature and have children despite a law forbidding them from doing so as long as they took longevity drugs. To pay back her parents' debt to Mother Nature, Anna will have to work for the rest of her life. But then Peter appears at the hall, and he tells a very different story about the world outside of the Grange. Peter begs Anna to escape Grange Hall, and to claim a life for herself outside its bleak walls. But even if they get out, they still have to make their way to London, to Anna's parents, and to an underground movement that's determined to bring back children and rid the world of longevity drugs.
