The farcical themed play is about playing a "twist" on the sexist opinion of folks who go to fortune tellers, practitioners of the occult, and Mojo Priest to have spells and incantations manifested on enemies, opponents, and especially loved ones when "reasoned" conversation is not an option.

Four men who are total strangers find themselves answering a discount offering flier for a "Thursday Men's Only" meeting with a conjure man who promises to help solve their most pressing love relationship problems. For $50 they are promised that the solution can come only if they go through a three stage ritual and at the end the spell that will be cast upon their mates will be equal to the severity of their unique situations. And as an added bonus not only will the spell be supernatural, but each man will see the future as the spell is played out on their mates.
