“Sunday 2nd April. Back to Tel Aviv and over to the Wolfbergs. They made us so welcome. A relation of theirs, a young fellow, was there. He was deaf because the Germans had experimented on him while in a camp. He works in a shoe factory and has a room which he shares with some other boys. What future is there for him? It's unbearable to talk about it....but everywhere one goes here there is tragedy....."

"Tuesday 11th April. Near Nazareth, from the top of a hill, we saw a complete rainbow. It was the most amazing sight. The scenery in the north is wonderful, the fields covered with yellow buttercups, the winding roads, and in the distance the snow-capped Mount Hermon."

In 1950, two years after getting married and living in London, England, and two years after the founding of the State of Israel, Shirley and Alfred Kleiman travelled to Israel, under the auspices of the Jewish National Fund, with a view to settling there. Shirley was a dedicated diarist and keen observer of life and A Month in the New Old Country is a detailed, day-by-day account of the four weeks they spent travelling around the whole country in March and April 1950; meeting people and seeing many of the challenges facing the new state. Those challenges included the legacy of wars, dealing with survivors of the Holocaust, the massive influx of Jewish immigrants from Arab countries, and establishing economic, agricultural, industrial, social and cultural infrastructures. For Shirley, who was never the best of travellers and who was in the early stages of pregnancy, there was also the particular challenge of avoiding - or rather failing to avoid - the frequent and frequently recorded bouts of sickness.

In A Month in a New Old Country, Shirley writes with wit, candour and emotion about the places she and Alfred visit and the people they meet, from fertile Galilee in the north to the Negev desert in the south. They visit towns, villages, kibbutzim, refugee camps and orphanages. They also travel with and meet many people, including members of Shirley's family who had already settled in what had been Palestine.

A Month in the New Old Country is a detailed first-hand, first-person account of life in Israel at a very early moment in its history, and contains the pages of the diary exactly as Shirley typed them out in 1950. The diary entries reflect the views of an intelligent and politically-engaged young woman. It is also very much of its time, and it occasionally reflect views of other people and cultures that the older Shirley would find objectionable.

What is striking about the diary, reading it today and knowing what has occurred in and around Israel in the intervening years, is the dynamism, idealism, optimism and sheer chutzpah of those early years. One can read it with a sense of pride and admiration in what has been achieved, but also with a sense of sadness that those undoubted achievements have been at a immense and, for some, tragic cost.
