"I am called a peacemaker, but I am not at peace."

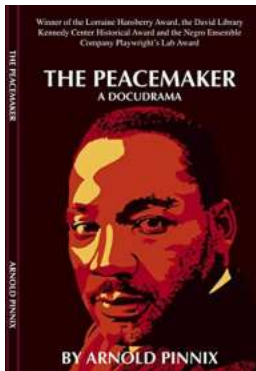

A startling revelation at curtain's rise from one who tirelessly fought and made the ultimate sacrifice for peace and justice. Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr., now deceased, explains: his soul cannot be at peace so long as violence and racial prejudice define the human condition. He looks at his watch. For, the author notes, the play's objective is: "Not having enough time to do what is needed in the life of such a truly great man."

In a series of vignettes, King begins with his boyhood under the austere hand of his father, a minister; then his teen and college years; all of which shaped his future leadership. His later struggles with inner demons and the political pressure cooker around him reveal his sorely tested marriage to Coretta Scott, their children's involuntary lessons on discrimination and the civil rights movement he spearheaded with ever-unyielding tenacity.
