A heartfelt and intimate biography on one of the most talented and interesting men of the 20th century. Traveling circuses were once as numerous as today's small-town carnivals. One of the most amazing stories coming out of that era is Leo Albrecht. Virtually a one-man show; Leo reached the height of his illustrious career well beyond the heydays of the small family circus. This talented man not only built the last circus parade on the American streets, he walked the wire and balanced an 85-lb. wagon wheel on his chin at 83. Despite an adventurous trek, numerous business setbacks, and a seasonal Vaudeville career, he fulfilled his childhood dream of owning his own circus at the dawn of the great depression. This diversified performer then went on to paint and carve his way into a piece of the upper Midwestern American history. At 123 pages and 98 historic photographs "Tales of a Small Town Circus Legend" is interesting, entertaining and fun to read. This all-new and improved 2nd edition has added numerous new photographs that are much larger, and much clearer than the first book. We wanted to tell this amazing story through photographs as well as print.
