Central Themes Explored

1. Intersectionality and Transnational Feminism:

Mohanty's work emphasizes the intersectionality of various social identities and the importance of understanding the experiences of Third World women within a transnational context. She challenges the homogenization of women and advocates for an inclusive feminist movement that takes into account race, class, and nationality.

2. Western Gaze and Stereotyping:

By using the concept of the "Western gaze," Mohanty sheds light on the Western world's tendency to exoticize and stereotype women from the Global South. She highlights the harmful consequences of such objectification and calls for a more balanced representation of Third World women within Western feminist discourse.

3. Neocolonialism and Imperialism:

Mohanty unpacks the legacy of colonization and imperialism, focusing on the ways in which Western powers exploit and oppress Third World countries. She argues that Western feminist discourse often perpetuates a neocolonial mindset, reinforcing power imbalances and undermining the agency of Third World women.

The Impact of "Under Western Eyes"

Chandra Talpade Mohanty's "Under Western Eyes" sparked a significant shift in feminist scholarship, challenging the predominant Western-centric perspectives within the field. Its impact can be seen in various disciplines, including sociology, gender studies, and postcolonial theory. Mohanty's work provokes critical reflection, forcing academics and activists alike to consider the nuanced intersections of gender, race, and class within a global framework.
