Neolithic Settlements

Fast forward to around 4000 BCE, and the Peak District Moors witnessed the arrival of neolithic settlers. These early humans were drawn to the fertile soil and abundant game, establishing settlements that would sustain their communities for centuries. Evidence of these settlements can be found in the numerous stone circles and burial mounds scattered across the moors.

Roman Conquest and Beyond

The Roman invasion of Britain in 43 CE brought significant changes to the Peak District Moors. The Romans saw the strategic importance of the area and established forts along its edges. The moors became a critical defensive position, guarding against potential threats from the north. Even after the decline of the Roman Empire, the strategic value of the moors persisted, with medieval castles and fortifications dotting the landscape.

Industrial Revolution

The Peak District Moors witnessed a dramatic transformation during the Industrial Revolution. The discovery of rich coal and mineral deposits beneath the moors led to extensive mining operations. Canals were dug, railways were built, and the moors buzzed with activity as industrial towns sprung up around mining and manufacturing centers. The legacy of this era can still be seen today in the numerous abandoned mine shafts and remnants of old factories that dot the landscape.

“A superb new book . . . explores the history of Britain’s first National Park from the Stone Age to the modern day . . . lavishly illustrated.”—Reflections Magazine

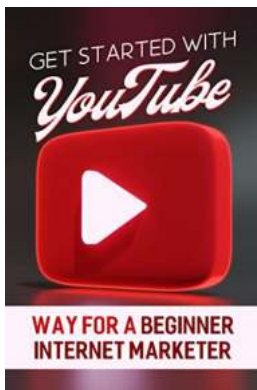

The moors of the Peak District provide some of the finest walking country in England. The pleasure of rambling across them is enhanced by a knowledge of their history, ranging from prehistoric times and the middle ages to their conversion for grouse shooting and the struggle for the “right to roam” in modern times. This distinctive landscape is not an untouched, natural relic for it has been shaped by humans over the centuries. Now it is being conserved as part of Britain’s first National Park; much of it is in the care of The National Trust.

The book covers all periods of time from prehistory to the present, for a typical moorland walk might take in the standing stones of a prehistoric stone circle, a medieval boundary marker, a guide stoop dated 1709, the straight walls of nineteenth-century enclosure, a row of Victorian grouse butts, a long line of flagstones brought in by helicopter, and very much more besides.

“This is no ‘desk-based study’ but the product of a lifetime of living, working and researching in or immediately adjacent to the moors.”—The Local Historian

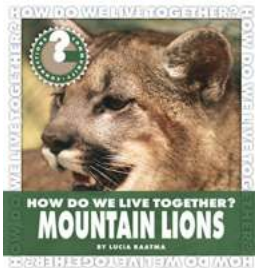

“David writes with a contagious enthusiasm. This generously illustrated book roams amongst the best—and lesser-known—moorland features . . . a guide par excellence.”—Peak Advertiser

“Few tomes can have been quite as comprehensive as David’s. Within these pages are Romans and Vikings, railways and canals, rambles and World War Two soldiers.”—The Star (Sheffield)
