One of the most inspiring modern traction profiles is that of Neil Patel, a renowned digital marketer and entrepreneur. While success stories are inspiring, it's essential to acknowledge the failures and pitfalls along the way. Modern traction profiles are not exempt from setbacks and failures. Failure is often a stepping stone towards success, teaching valuable lessons and providing an opportunity for growth.

An example of failure in the modern traction realm is the story of Elizabeth Holmes, the founder and former CEO of Theranos. Despite being hailed as a potential game-changer in the healthcare industry, Holmes's company faced a downfall due to false claims and unethical practices. Her story teaches us the importance of transparency, integrity, and staying true to one's values in the pursuit of success.

Andrew Fowler is a well known writer of railway history, with a regular feature in Railway Herald Magazine. The Deltic class 55 Locomotives were some of the most successful, first generation diesels introduced to British Railways, being constructed from 1960-1962 and numbering twenty two, in the production class. The prototype machine was constructed in 1956 and was tested extensively on express trains on the London Midland and Eastern Regions of B R, until 1960. The interest and enthusiasm, for the class is reflected in the fact, that six examples of the class are preserved, including the 1956 prototype. The Baby Deltics, were a derivative Locomotive design, using one rather than two engines, for use on outer suburban and short main line semi fast services. Only ten Baby Deltics were constructed between 1961-1962, for use on services out of London Kings Cross. The Baby Deltics were all withdrawn within a decade, as they were not very successful in main line service.
