What if your pheromones made you wildly attractive to women?

It's been thirty-eight years since The Outbreak when an Ebola vaccine contaminated by a mysterious viral mutation caused more than 99% of the world male population to contract Male Estrus Syndrome - MES - a condition which renders men impotent except for a few days during the year.

Fifteen-year-old Aiden Stevens is one of a tiny handful of males who have Male Hypersexuality Syndrome. Those affected by MHS are not only unaffected by the virus but possess heightened sex drives and a powerful, constant output of pheromones which incite lust in nearly all the women around him. As a young student accustomed to being ignored by the "beautiful people" in high school, Aiden is ill-prepared for his swift rise to stardom and the lascivious interest of girls and women everywhere.

When he accepts a lucrative offer to be studied by his mother's employer, the biotech giant, CellEvolve, Inc., Aiden battles jealous female scientists, power-hungry executives, government agencies, and his own conscience as experiments on his body lead to a breakthrough in the treatment of MES that promises to change the world.
