21. "It wasn't easy tolerating him talking this way to her, to bear his scorn, his ridicule, his insults, his walking past her like she was nothing but a house cat. But after four years of marriage, Mariam saw clearly how much a woman could tolerate when she was afraid. And Mariam was afraid. She lived in fear of his shifting moods, his volatile temperament, his insistence on clearing even mundane exchanges down a confrontational path that, on occasion, he would resolve with punches, slaps, kicks, and sometimes try to make amends for with polluted apologies and sometimes not."

In the four years since the day at the bathhouse, there had been six more cycles of hopes raised then dashed, each less, each collapse, each trip to the doctor more crushing for Mariam than the last. With each disappointment, Rasheed had grown more remote and resentful. Now nothing she did pleased him. She cleaned the house, made sure he always had a supply of clean shirts, cooked him his favorite dishes. Once, disapprovingly, she even bought makeup and put it on for him. But when he came home, he took one look at her and winced with such disgust that she rushed to the bathroom and washed it all off, tears of shame mixing with soapy water, rouge, and mascara" (90-99)
