The year is 1992. The smallest of the former Soviet republics has recently regained its freedom following a half-century of repressive occupation. Estonia is back on the map.

What happens next?

This evocative memoir vividly captures the frantic yet optimistic spirit of an extraordinary moment in time, providing a detailed and moving account of daily life in a country undergoing dramatic change just a year after the collapse of the Soviet empire.

In these pages you'll become immersed in this tumultuous period and meet a fascinating procession of real people—Estonians and Russians, students and teachers, capitalists and Communists—as they struggle to rebuild their lives and make ends meet in a collapsing economy while working to reinvent their battered nation.

The author, recruited to teach at the first private university to be established in the former Soviet Union, candidly recounts experiences that are by turns grim, hilarious, and poignant.
