The Origins of Drat We Re Rats: Bad News Ballet

Drat We Re Rats: Bad News Ballet was conceived by visionary choreographer, Vincent Van Rodent. Van Rodent, known for his avant-garde approach to dance, sought to create a ballet that explored the darker aspects of human nature. Inspired by the works of literary masters such as Edgar Allan Poe and Franz Kafka, Van Rodent aimed to depict the inner struggles and conflicts that plague our society.

The ballet itself tells a haunting tale of a dystopian world, where humanity is stripped of their individuality and imprisoned by their own fears and anxieties. Set against a backdrop of eerie music and striking visuals, the dancers seamlessly merge elements of contemporary ballet with experimental movement to convey a sense of unease and vulnerability.
