Jacqueline, the young heir of Holland, stands in the deadly crosshairs of the most powerful male rulers in Europe. Based upon true events in 1413.

At the young age of sixteen, Jacqueline inherits the countship of Holland and is determined to reign on her own. She disregards her assembly's demand to choose a husband, then leads her army to victory in their first defensive battle. In response, the all-powerful Duke Philip of Burgundy sends his good friend to Den Haag to thwart her efforts.

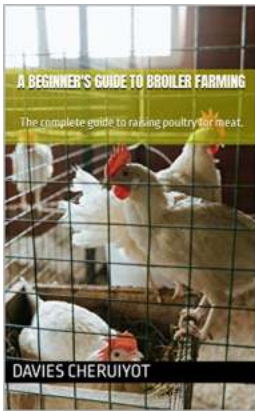

Lord Renard Borselen resents being used as a pawn yet agrees to meet with the Dutch assembly. When he sees Jacqueline again, he recalls their first meeting years ago and a spark of excitement catches him, the first since that day. He openly shifts his stance and now there is hell to pay for them both.

As Jacqueline continues her great struggle to retain her title and fight for the freedom of her people against Duke Philip, she is torn between her country and her love for Renard. Will Duke Philip ever relent in his fight against her?
