When secrets get out...

Ever since eight-year-old Hazel and her little sister, Bess, found a time machine and a trunk full of stolen items from history in their grandparents' attic, they have been taking trips through time to return things while they meet historical figures and relive history along the way.

But the time machine is supposed to be a secret. And, their grandparents' sneaky neighbor, Bobby, is at his old tricks again. The 10-year-old boy saw Hazel and her sister leaving in the time machine once, and he keeps trying to catch them again so he can record it and put it on the internet.

Hazel can't let that happen, not even when her grandparents agree to watch Bobby while Bobby's mother is away.

Will Bobby sneak his way onto the time machine? Or, will the girls figure things out and stop him?

Find out in the sixth book in the Time Machine Girls series when the girls travel to 1965 to meet Dr. Martin Luther King, Jr. during the Civil Rights march in Selma, Alabama where they also learn the importance of standing up when it matters in life, and how hard that can be sometimes.
