The expedition Las Balsas was the culmination of a singular marine adventure that began in 1966. The final objective was to demonstrate the confidence and capacity of men before themselves and extreme circumstances. This experience was forged in the work and preparation that went on for nine years.

LAS BALSAS set sail on May 27, 1973 and reached Ballina, in the region of New South Wales, Australia on November 21, 1973, having navigated 173 days and covered 9,213 nautical miles.

A distance record was established as well as a survival record in a ship wrecked condition on primitive rafts. The total nautical miles compiled were 42,555 kilometers (26,242 miles). This is 2,555 kilometers (1,587 miles), more than the distance around the earth at the equator in 483 days.

This is the tale of three rafts and it's brave crew.
