TERRA INCOGNITA is a collection of printed and electronic books that will be published four times a year. It will be completed by luxury finished photographic portfolios, and single Fine Art prints. Far Away in the Andes is the first work for the TERRA INCOGNITA Collection. It's a tender and at the same time rigorous photographic approach to the Andes Cordillera Cultural and Natural Heritage, in a format and style never published before by any traditional Editorial House.

TERRA INCOGNITA is an original documentary project based in Photography, created and produced by photographer and writer Andrés Salinero (Buenos Aires, Argentina, 1963).

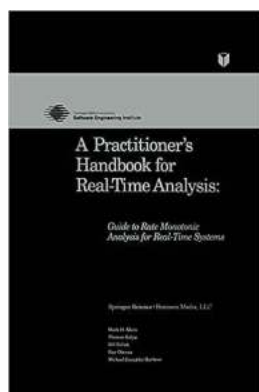

Project's goal is to find and interpret South America's unknown Natural and Cultural Heritage from an artistic approach. A thorough work of journalistic research was made during the long pre- production stage, while themes were selected on the basis of their visual and conceptual potential.

Each production demands an in-depth, exhausting and expensive fieldwork.

That's the decisive stage

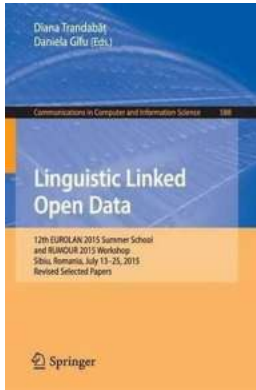

-when photographic contents are created. Remote, hard to reach and isolated regions of this part of the world are the protagonists, and from the intense interaction with Photography derive the results.

After the end of the "epic moments" of Modernism by the end of XX Century, Photography rethought its stark, predictable language and complex artists like William Eggleston, Stephen Shore, Joel Sternfeld, Len Jenschel, Alex Webb, William Albert Allard and others revolutionated form, content, and meaning. Since then -and since them- nothing was the same, and the power of straight Photography, be it documentary or whatever any other label you prefer, displays its potential in books, exhibitions and big events around the world.
